Today's Chanakya™ Poll: Women's Reservation Bill : Milesto History of Indian Democracy ?

New Delhi, Delhi, India -- (Business Wire India) -- Monday, March 29, 2010 12:46:00 PM

To bring about gender equality in parliament and state assemblies, the women's reservation bill was conducted across the country in different regional languages. Data were collected to the profile of including by age, Sex, Social class, household, work status, literacy level , etc.

Today's Chanakya interviewed a random sample of 6443 adult people between 15th -24th March 2010 conducted across the country in different regional languages. Data were collected to the profile of including by age, Sex, Social class, household, work status, literacy level , etc.

As per opinion of the public, the Women's Reservation Bill will change the democracy rule in India. fear that it will empower women however it will certainly bring about radical changes in the way, the functions.

The reservation in Panchayat and local bodies were found encouraging as per the research sample. Increase women's representation for political parties would be to have quota for women & both reservation system. However if this bill does cross the Lok sabha, of which the people across India are doubtful historic in Indian democracy.

At present there is no cap on political parties giving tickets to women candidates rather than reservation. The often repeated reason is that the women candidate cannot defeat established male- opponents. fear that giving party ticket is no guarantee that a significant number of women would get elected.

Increase of strength of parliament and the assemblies is a solution of this huge cry and fear of loss of men. But there is again a constitutional cap on increasing the strength of lok sabha till 2020 and to sit and added government expenditure on these extra-elected representatives. If such proposals new delimitation would have to be taken as per our experts on this bill. However if this is set out then the rules of Indian democracy as per finding of this research.
